

Acquisition of AndroidPolice.com by Valnet Inc.

Valnet Inc. (or “Valnet”) has successfully completed the acquisition of AndroidPolice.com (“Android Police”), a premier high-authority Android-focused publishing site. Android Police has been a go-to reference for the Android technology community since 2009, by publishing the latest Android news, tips, tutorials, videos, and podcasts.

As per Android Police founder, Artem Russakovskii:

“Over a decade ago, I created a blog as a personal passion project to cover a promising new mobile computing platform: Android. Android Police quickly grew into one of the leading publications covering the Android ecosystem. I am so proud of Android Police and my team, and grateful to the many passionate members of the Android community. I believe Valnet is the right company to take Android Police and the team to the next level, and I'm excited for its undoubtedly bright future.”

This acquisition is highly complementary to MakeUseOf.com, Valnet’s flagship technology site, and will reinforce Valnet’s presence in the technology vertical. Valnet remains growth-driven and dedicated to acquiring additional premium publishing assets in the technology vertical.

About Valnet Inc.

Driven by passion and performance, Valnet’s overarching goal is to create and distribute content to millions of users daily across our brands. With more than 3 billion sessions and 20 billion Youtube views, Valnet is a leading digital content investment company that owns and operates a diversified portfolio of premier publishing and studio assets.

About AndroidPolice.com

The site was founded in December 2009 by Artem Russakovskii, an avid Android supporter. Android Police serves over 7 million monthly sessions to over 4 million unique monthly visitors.

AndroidPolice.com was represented by Logan Abner from WeBrokr.

Contact

Rony Arzoumanian

Head of M&A

Contact: rony.a@valnetinc.com | 514-497-7787

Website: valnetinc.com